What is the goal of guidance and counselling?

“The major goal of guidance is to build the career management skills of all citizens”

“It is an integral part of several measures to support young people, such as the reintegration of early school-leavers, measures to foster employability or measures to remove practical or logistical barriers”

Youth Guarantee and Lifelong Guidance*, European Lifelong Guidance Policy Network (ELGPN) – Concept note October 2013

“build up career guidance structures systematically and extensively

so that school-leavers are in a position to make sound career choices which take account of the labour market context.

The availability of career advice from an early stage, i.e. before individuals leave school, can substantially contribute to the accomplishment of the Youth Guarantee”.

At the high-level Conference on the promotion of youth employment in Europe held in Berlin in July
2013, German Federal Chancellor Merkel

“Effective career guidance provision is essential to support pupils during transition periods, especially in the course of their education”

Guidance counsellors:

- Developing career management skills require well-established career education during compulsory schooling
- Counsellors are key workers to catch the attention of young people who are NEET, help the orientation process
- An agent of change to help young people through transitions (from school to work, work to work, or work to school).

International good practices

Germany: supporting pupils in making an informed choice about their career. Example: “Qualifications and connections” is a four-year programme (transition) Pupils in grades seven or eight participate in an analysis of their potential, interests and aspirations. They also receive occupational guidance. Students in their penultimate school year profit from mentoring and oversight until the completion of their first year in vocational training.

Finland: “Occupational start” offers young people who are unsure about their educational trajectory and career direction an alternative programme during which they can find out about different occupations.

Slovakia: specific support to children from migrant backgrounds or to Roma children (Slovakia)

Malta: focusing support on pupils with special educational needs

Romania: Guidance and counselling curricula (grades 1-12), Personal development curricula (grades 0-2) – developing career management skills, communication skills, self-knowledge
